(36~38)

The UK and France may be near each other in Europe, but there are a few differences between British culture and French culture. The first difference is the way they greet people. The French will get close to a person and kiss them on the cheek. The British prefer to shake hands, or they may not even touch at all. British people still have a monarch, which is a king or queen. However, France hasn't had a monarch since the 1700s.

Some people say that the UK is a northern country and France is a southern country. This means that British people are harder working and more serious, while the French are more relaxed about life. Finally, when British people go to a bar, they will often drink beer. On the other hand, the French are famous for their love of wine.

 monarch 君主 bar 酒吧 cheek 臉頰 prefer 偏好

36. How would you greet someone in France ?
- (A) Pick them up. (B) Pull their hair.
(C) Gently touch their face with your lips. (D) Wave to them without touching.

James Harrison, an Australian boy, had an operation on his lungs in 1951. The surgery lasted several hours and he survived though he was in the hospital for three months. When James learned that his survival was because of the large amount of blood he had received, he decided to start giving blood when he was 18. Even if he was scared of seeing needles, he still began to give large amounts of blood, and a few years later, doctors realized that his blood was special.

In the 1950s, millions of babies died from rhesus disease each year. This affects up to 17% of babies, and could be fatal. In the 1960s, doctors investigated rhesus disease and developed anti-D, a way of curing the disease. However, anti-D needed blood, and only a few people were able to give the right kind. James was one of them, and all anti-D in Australia was made with his blood until 2015.

Anti-D had saved millions of babies' lives all over the world since it was invented. It's said James' blood saved 2.4 million babies, including his own children. James was still modest and said that he was the same as anyone else who gave blood. James gave blood as often as every two weeks, and he had done this 1173 times by his 81st birthday. Australian law doesn't allow people to give blood at this age of 81, but there's no doubt that James' good deeds will live on.

|---|--|
| (A) It requires people to give blood regularly. | (B) It is expensive to make and takes time. |
| (C) Very few people's blood can be used. | (D) Doctors aren't allowed to make the drug. |

43. Why might James Harrison have chosen not to give blood before he was 18 ?

- | | |
|--|--|
| (A) A new law stopped him from doing so. | (B) He had given too much blood already. |
| (C) He did not like needles. | (D) He had something wrong with his blood. |

44. What is the main topic of this article ?

- (A) How an Australian boy survived a major operation
(B) A disease that kills millions of people each year
(C) The good work of Australians who give blood
(D) How one man saved millions of babies' lives
